Nov 26 at 8pm: Caracol (at La Petite Slague). In the winter of 2011, Carole Facal (alias Caracol) hunkered down in her home studio to write the songs that would become her new album "Blanc mercredi" (White Wednesday). Inspired by winter imagery, love poems, paintings and art deco pieces, her French and English lyrics shine through pleasantly rousing arrangements that draw from alternative pop, retro soul and old-time folk. With her band members, Caracol seems to be hosting an intimate family affair, where everyone adds their touch to the proceedings. Fine harmonies are supported by unexpected sounds, produced by various guitars and resonators, a ukulele, vintage amplifiers and all sorts of percussions. The soundscape is unique, modern and gleaming with love... quite the irony for a girl who in earlier days had sworn to have no truck with that topic in her songs! Yet her musings now remind us that life's beauties and truths are all the more precious when they seem all too rare. Little Montreal, Elgin Street. info : www.laslague.ca , tickets : www.letno.ca le 26 novembre 2011 à 20 h au Little Montreal: Caracol à La Petite Slague. Au cœur de l'hiver de 2011, Carole Facal (alias Caracol) s'est enfermé dans un cocon sonore pour composer les pièces de son nouvel album « Blanc mercredi ». Inspirés par des images hivernales, des poèmes d'amour, des livres de peinture et d'art déco, ses textes francophones et anglophones se collent à des musiques aux accents folk, pop alternatif et rétro-soul. Accompagnée par ses musiciens, c'est dans une ambiance quasi familiale que Caracol peint son « Blanc mercredi ». En cet univers intimiste, les sonorités délicieusement fêlées côtoient les harmonies vocales raffinées et les guitares, résonateurs, ukulélés, vieux amplificateurs et percussions de toutes sortes. Le résultat est lumineux et authentique, résolument moderne, rempli d'amour... non sans ironie pour Caracol, qui avait jadis juré ne jamais écrire à ce sujet! Or, ses chansons hypersensibles rappellent que la beauté existe toujours et que les certitudes, aussi rares soient-elles, sont belles. info : www.laslague.ca Billets : www.letno.ca
